HOW DO I MODEL CHRISTIAN VIRTUES TO MY STAFF AND STUDENTS?

Former Principal of Emmanuel College and founder and former Director of the Emmanuel Centre for the Study of Science, Religion and Society, University of Queensland, Australia

The short article on virtues resonates with me as I head up a Residential University College where our mission is to provide pastorally sensitive academic support for our students. Personally, the paper challenges me to think how I model Christian virtues to my staff and students and how I can call upon them we interpret the mission of the College. It is a particular challenge as we have recently established an institute (The Sugden Institute) in which it is envisioned as a forum for the scholarly yet accessible exploration of public concerns, premised on a sensitivity to the ongoing complexity of debate around such issues as reconciliation, diversity, sustainability and leadership.
