

Global Faculty Initiative

The Faculty Initiative seeks to promote the integration of Christian faith and academic disciplines
by bringing theologians into conversation with scholars across the spectrum of faculties
in research universities worldwide.

www.globalfacultyinitiative.net

LEADER GUIDE | JUSTICE MODULE 2 | JUSTICE IN SCRIPTURE

Session Objectives

1. To retrieve Wolterstorff's biblical understanding of the ubiquity of the Bible's teaching about justice in both the OT and NT
2. To reflect on a puzzle—if justice and rights are central to the biblical revelation, why are they so often neglected by the church and Christian scholars?
3. To consider how common misconceptions and mistranslations have suppressed attention to justice and rights in the church and Christian scholarship

Reading

Wolterstorff: Theology Brief - 'Why the de-justicising of the bible?' (Justice and Rights, page 12) [6 minutes to read]

Wolterstorff: Theology Brief - 'A matter of translation' (Justice and Rights, page 13) [7 minutes to read]

Wolterstorff: Postscript - 'The biblical understanding of justice' (Justice and Rights, page 192) [8 minutes to read]

Summary

Nicholas Wolterstorff claims that the Bible's central emphasis on justice can be observed across the entire biblical revelation. However, its significance has been obscured by, first, a common misunderstanding about the New Testament's teaching about love and, second, a common mistranslation of the New Testament's most explicit texts about justice. The New Testament's teaching that the greatest commandment is to love one's neighbour as oneself has often been misunderstood as somehow negating or discounting concerns for justice, a common theme in the Old Testament. Wolterstorff argues from the biblical texts themselves that the Bible's emphases on love and justice are not mutually exclusive but rather, mutually illuminating. He further contends that the New Testament's frequent teachings about justice have been regularly missed by English readers due to the way the Greek terms dikaïos and dikaïosunê are consistently translated in English Bibles as "righteous" and "righteousness", which obscures the fact those terms also mean "just" and "justice," respectively. Once we recover this nuance, the New Testament's explicit emphasis on matters of justice becomes readily apparent. This emphasis reinforces the ubiquity of justice in all genres of OT writings and compels a rethinking of justice and rights in the Gospels and Epistles as they reach across church history into the present.

Questions

Q1: Wolterstorff maintains that themes of justice and rights span the scriptures, but very often they have been suppressed in Christian traditions. Has your tradition, or your personal spiritual pilgrimage, been more or less alert to the Bible's concerns with justice and rights? In what ways?

Leader prompts:

- Suppressed: strong emphasis on personal faith without attention to systemic justice; few encounters in faith communities with rights issues of contemporary times; emphasis on ritual worship and not on outworkings of faith in the world; strong emphasis on propositional belief and less on protecting biblically-emphasized rights; church vulnerable to the temptations to abuse power.
- Alerted: like Wolterstorff, personally motivated by a specific historical and contemporary wrong; informed by Roman Catholic 'Compendium on the Social Doctrine of the Church'; active personally to protect the weak; part of church communities with a strong justice orientation.

Q2: In his Postscript, Wolterstorff proposes an eight-point Biblical understanding of justice and rights (Justice and Rights, page 192):

1. The declaration that God is just and loves justice, and enjoins human beings to imitate God in doing and seeking justice.
2. Love for one's neighbor requires treating them justly and out of love.
3. Old Testament writers connect justice with what they call, in Hebrew, shalom.
4. Justice is an intrinsic component of what the NT writers call the kingdom of God.
5. When the biblical writers speak of justice and injustice, it is almost always social (systemic) justice.
6. Biblical writers emphasize the condition of the widows, the orphans, the sojourners, and the impoverished – call them the quartet of the vulnerable.
7. Biblically, securing justice in society is central to the God-given task of government.
8. To worship God is to render to God what is due God – to render to God what justice requires.
9. Wolterstorff emphasizes systemic justice, entire classes of vulnerable people, the kingdom of God, and earthly government.

As Christians, what should be our priorities in pursuing systemic justice for the ‘quartet of the vulnerable’ and others, through our embeddedness in local, national and international governments?

Leader prompts:

- government programs for homelessness; social welfare supports for poor (economic justice and redistribution, Sloman, Justice and Rights, page 69); stimulating markets for good jobs; affirming the languages of indigenous peoples or marginal social classes (linguistic injustice, Bell, Justice and Rights, page 80); enacting economic and social laws to affirm dignity of women (dignity, sexual violence and justice, High, Justice and Rights, page 117); protecting children in divorce settlements (parental obligations, Parkinson, Justice and Rights, page 113); educating against racial and gender discrimination; treating refugees humanely; strengthening justice-oriented international organizations and institutions (justice in transitional legal orders, Halliday, Justice and Rights, page 137); giving voice to the silenced (linguistic injustice, Bell, Justice and Rights, page 80); pursuing justice through more transparent, empirically-informed, and fair government rules (justice, market failures and government agency rule-making, Lee, Justice and Rights, page 121).

Q3: Wolterstorff argues that readers of English Bible translations have often been blinded to the New Testament’s emphasis on justice due to the way the Greek terms dikaïos and dikaïosunê have been consistently translated as ‘righteous’ and ‘righteousness’, when the words also carry the meaning of ‘just’ and ‘justice’, respectively. Has this ‘blinding’ to justice in the Bible, and especially the New Testament (NT), suppressed the relevance of justice to your own research and scholarly practice?

Leader prompts:

- Blinding – a limited awareness that the NT calls me to a theological-ethical concern with rights and justice in ordinary university life or academic endeavours; NT interpretations seem less societal in orientation than personal or church-oriented, and thus little consideration is given to justice in the university or wider academic spheres of activity; apparent tension between work and faith that juxtaposes the seeming contradiction between law and love/mercy (for discussion on the intricate relationship between love/mercy and justice, see disciplinary briefs by philosopher Osam Temple, Justice and Rights, page 51; professor of constitutional law Nicholas Aroney, Justice and Rights, page 103; and biblical theologian K.K. Yeo, Justice and Rights, page 44).

Q4: The GFI Dialogue on Justice and Rights led to lively exchanges over the relationship between justice and love. Wolterstorff states that love has frequently been contrasted to justice, some wrongly arguing that love in the NT supercedes justice in the OT. He contends both are salient in both the OT and NT and are ‘mutually illuminating’ (Justice and Rights, page 12). Yet, Osam Temple notes that there can be ‘justice without love’ (Justice and Rights, page 52). Wolterstorff agrees that ‘caring for others’ is an expression of love and that ‘caring for someone necessarily includes treating them justly’ (Justice and Rights, page 193). Does your reading of Scripture lead you to think primarily in terms of ‘love and relationships’ or ‘justice and rights’? Who or what are the primary objects of ‘care’ in your own scholarship and scholarly life? How can they be treated justly, out of love?

Leader prompts:

- Primary objects of care in our scholarly lives, locally, nationally, or world-wide: e.g., students, doctoral candidates, assistants, university workers, fellow scholars, university administrators; junior scholars; scholars from outside the academic centers of power; over-burdened and under-resourced scholars; historically marginalised scholars.
- Modes of ‘acting justly out of love’, and ‘caring’: encouragement, coaching, affirming excellences; going the extra mile in mentoring; advising on writing of papers, articles, books, reports; recognizing, overcoming personal prejudices.
- See philosopher and physicist Claudia Vanney (Justice and Rights, page 185), biblical theologian K.K. Yeo (Justice and Rights, page 47), and professor in international relations Glanville’s (Justice and Rights, page 176) Disciplinary Briefs for discussions on acting justly in the academy.

Other Questions

- How does accountability for justice and rights enter the academic world and your field?
- While Wolterstorff primarily cites prophetic declarations (e.g., Isaiah 61; 58:6-7; Luke 4:16-21; Matthew 12:17-20) and explicit commandments (e.g., Matthew 22:34-40, Mark 12: 28-34; Luke 10: 25-37; Deuteronomy 6:5; Leviticus 19:18), does the Bible’s remarkable composite of literary genres, including poetry, prose narrative, apocalyptic visions, letters, and more, amplify our understanding of justice?
- If you have primarily engaged Scripture in languages other than English, how have your Bible translations rendered passages such as Matthew 5:6, ‘Blessed are those who hunger and thirst for justice (dikaïosunê), for they shall be satisfied’? How has your tradition typically understood such passages?

In Depth

Direct links to original writings by GFI scholars

Theology

Justice and Mercy (Justice and Rights, page 35) [White | Theology | Angelicum]

On an alternative view of justice (Justice and Rights, page 42) [O'Donovan | Theology | U of Edinburgh]

On justice as an attribute of God (Justice and Rights, page 46); on God's justice extended to all nations (Justice and Rights, page 47) [Yeo | Theology | Garrett/Northwestern U]

Doing justice and mercy in disaster relief (Justice and Rights, page 75) [Davis | Architecture | Lund U]

On God's merciful justice (Justice and Rights, page 57) [Case | Human Flourishing | Harvard U]

On socio-political transformation through the gospel (Justice and Rights, page 44); Using biblical principles to transform our world towards justice (Justice and Rights, page 47) [Yeo | Theology | Garrett/Northwestern U]

Natural Sciences & Engineering

Celebrating the natural world (Justice and Rights, page 147); On the Jubilee and the Sabbath and treating nature justly (Justice and Rights, page 148) [Hutchinson | Nuclear Science | MIT]

On doing justice and showing mercy in disasters (Justice and Rights, page 75) [Davis | Architecture | Lund U]

Social Sciences

Babel (Justice and Rights, page 84); championing linguistic justice (Justice and Rights, page 83) [Bell | Sociolinguistics | Auckland U of Technology]

Amos and international aid (Justice and Rights, page 169) [Day | International Relations | Australian National U]

Humanities

Building epistemic justice as good news for the oppressed (Justice and Rights, page 183) [Gómez | Human Sciences

| U of Rosario]

Linguistic injustice and derogated regional accents of Jesus and the disciples (Justice and Rights, page 82) [Bell | Sociolinguistics | Auckland U of Technology]

“There is no love without justice but there can be justice without love” (Justice and Rights, page 52) [Temple | Philosophy | Bakke Graduate U]

On biblical history written from the margins, by a people exiled or colonized with ‘searing self-critique . . . concerned with justice and oppression’ (Justice and Rights, page 66) [Coffey | History | U of Leicester]

Christians have something genuinely radical and subversive to contribute to debates on justice (Justice and Rights, page 55) [Watkin | French Studies | Monash U]

Law

Peace-making better than pursuing rights in family legal contexts (Justice and Rights, page 115) [Parkinson | Law | University of Queensland]

On justice in judicial proceedings (Justice and Rights, page 15) [Wolterstorff | Philosophy and Theology | Yale]

On the justice in transnational legal orders (Justice and Rights, page 137) [Halliday | Sociology | American Bar Foundation]

Medicine and Public Health

On healing the sick beyond the requirement of justice (Justice and Rights, page 165) [Peteet | Psychiatry | Harvard U]

Justice as equality and equity in the context of healthcare (Justice and Rights, page 154); Justice as equal respect with regards to rights to the highest attainable standard of health (Justice and Rights, page 154); On the nature of health rights (Justice and Rights, page 156); Understanding health as wholeness (Justice and Rights, page 156) and justice as respecting wholeness (Justice and Rights, page 160) [VanderWeele | Public Health | Harvard U]

Love and justice in public health (Justice and Rights, page 160); the integral importance of relationships to health (Justice and Rights, page 161) [VanderWeele | Public Health | Harvard U]

For more information

www.globalfacultyinitiative.net